Sc.30 Leisure contract monitoring - DC Leisure

The committee received and considered report 16/11 of the head of economy, leisure and property.

The committee was advised that the contract had not been set up with key performance indicators at its conception.

When asked whether there was any reason for the step down in usage figures, Chris Webb, (officer) reported that it was difficult to capture user data at the centre, given its open plan layout. He advised that there was no controlled access and that many customers using, for example, the café or spectating were not being included in the data. He added that spectator data would not be reflected in revenue.

It was reported that the centre performed as expected in respect of energy costs and usage, when considering its size and age.

One member asked why according to paragraph 16 of the report, there was no requirement for the contractor to improve performance. It was advised that this had not been written into the contract. Members commented that this was surprising at they would have expected a view to have been taken on performance by the officers. Chris Webb advised that he was content with the visitor numbers and that the centre performed well.

With respect to the customer survey, members commented that the numbers returned were so low that it would not give a true reflection of the customer experience. It was suggested that the contractor should offer incentives to customers to complete the survey.

One member asked for clarification on the issue of corporate identity. Officers advised that it was important that the centre be recognised as a council facility, given the strong Active Nation brand.

Members considered the trend monitoring data in open session, having been agreed by the head of economy, leisure and property.

One member questioned why there had been a drop in the standards of cleanliness. It was advised that following the contract for cleaning being contracted out the standards had fallen. It was reported that standards had improved since cleaning had returned in house. Mr Webb confirmed that the result of ad hoc visits to the site suggested that standards had improved.

One member questioned how the problems with telephone systems were being addressed. It was reported that from October the centre would be offering online booking and in addition the contractors would be looking at different options for the phone system.

Mr Rolls, from Active Nation, commented that he was disappointed with the scores, however it was an improving picture. He advised that the centre was recruiting more experienced staff and that the turnaround of staff needed to be reduced.

Vale of White Horse District Council – Scrutiny Committee minutes

One member suggested that communication between the Vale and the centre should be improved, the Vale officers should be more proactive.

One member commented that the performance management of contracts should be more like the private sector model. He did not consider the current method adequate and suggested that the cabinet should be tasked with looking at how facilities in the future should be managed and assessed for performance.

RESOLVED: To recommend to the cabinet that it reviews how facilities such as the white horse leisure and tennis centre will be managed and assessed for performance.

Sc.31 Independent review on the conduct of the 2011 local elections

The Chair invited Members to ask questions of the officers, following on from the meeting which was held on 21 July.

Members asked a series of questions, outlined below and the chief executive, head of legal and democratic services, democratic services manager and elections officer assisted in answering them.

Question	Answer
Did officers consider the risk assessment in planning the elections and had this been updated since it was considered at Scrutiny last year?	Yes
The register had identified risks and means of mitigating them, had these been considered?	Yes, for example the contingency for failure to deliver postal votes was to hand deliver.
Did officers advise the public about the problems of non delivery of poll cards?	Yes, a notice was placed on our website and David Buckle did an interview with Radio Oxford
Did anyone look at samples of the print work?	Yes. Bev Lee and Marcia Beviere attended the printers in Sunderland and checked a series of samples and found them satisfactory.
Did officers look at the size of the envelopes?	Unfortunately officers had not witnessed the envelope being placed in the return envelope and therefore were unaware of the issue with size.
Were agents aware that they could attend postal vote opening?	Yes, agents had been briefed.
Why did the council not issue a letter to the public advising that poll cards were not required to vote?	At the time officers were unaware of the extent of the problem, and therefore would have had to send a letter out to the entire district, which would have been very costly. Officers emphasised that the extent of the problem was not immediately apparent, and appeared sporadic in nature.

Question	Answer
What would be done if there was a similar problem in future	It is difficult, because all experienced printers would be busy at election times. For the past three elections, three different companies had been used and each had let the council down in different ways.
Shouldn't the Vale have someone overseeing the distribution internally?	One option would be to get the printing company to print, then send to us for distribution, however the deadlines are incredibly tight and this option might delay the receipt of postal votes.
Were project management tools and plans applied	Yes, there was a project plan and it was on track, all of the tight deadlines had been met. The problem arose with the printers, not in the project planning. The problems arose because the printers had not completed some tasks. If the printers had come a week before the election to advise that these tasks had not been completed, the council would have known the extent and could have acted.
Why was the printer not being proactively managed?	Officers were asking for docketts to prove batches had been sent out, however it was accepted that more cross checking was required. There should have been more use of the Online Business Account, which would have checked the quantities of the documents supplied.
Did the chief executive think the non delivery was acceptable?	No, he was disappointed and angry with the printers.
Did the officers check for poll card docketts?	Not immediately, they were requested at a later stage.

One member commented that many people had been disenfranchised, which was unacceptable. She questioned whether the chief executive was taking responsibility. David Buckle advised that he had made a public apology. He further commented that the vast majority of voters did receive their postal packs, and that elections staff had reissued 400 votes to people reporting that they had not received their packs.

One member commented that the heart of the issue was that people felt that they were disenfranchised and it was important to go the extra mile to encourage people to vote, which was why sending out poll cards was so important.

One member questioned whether there had been adequate resources in the elections team at the time. The head of legal and democratic services responded that she did not believe this had been a problem, in fact there had been 2.5 full time staff at previous elections and at this election there had been 3.0, working for both councils but supported by other staff across the service.

The chair proposed the establishment of a small working party, members to be nominated by the group leaders, to look at the election project and action plan. It was suggested that this group report back to the committee in February 2012.

The committee considered the recommendations contained within the independent review and it was
